he revoked the bequest, and said in the codi-cil that he did so because the provisions made for public schools were very liberal, but the schools were not conducted in an economical manner, and the state legisla-had granted such extraordinary power to the city council that the property-holders had been plundered and oppressed by unjust and burdensome taxation. The document closes

THE ERUPTION OF VESUVIUS .- On Friday night at about twelve o'clock, the lava began to overflow, and a long snake-like rivulet took the direction of Pompeii. The eruption was hardly expected, for the smoke and vapor emitted by the crater for some months past in great abundance had somewhat abated. On Saturday a tremendous column of white varor toward over the abuse and of white vapor towered over the abyss and the reflection of the burning furnace from underneath on the feathery cloud gave it a splendid crimson tint, dying out into the most delicate pink. Large quantities of cinders and iapillæ have been thrown up.

There is reason to believe that the eruption will be a long one.—[Manchester Guardian,

The lady of a house in which we are sometimes a guest, was in great trouble with her lamps, of which she had three or four differleats which no living Englishman can parent styles for burning kerosene. One lamp after another, a short time ago, began to If no other moral is to be deduced from the burn poorly; new wicks were put in all around, but in a few hours they were as bad performances of Weston, at least it is certain that he has shown us what an amazing before. Being taken into consultation degree of fatigue a fine walker is able to we suggested that she had a poor oil, but the oil was Pratt's, and bought in the original packages, besides, there was the German students' lamp, in which the same oil burned splendidly. We became interested in the case, and made a careful diagnosis, as the physicians say. The oil was of a good kind, the wicks were new, the lamps, of different styles, each apparently perfect, and as good as ever while all the lamps had one as good as ever, while all the lamps but one had been gradually growing bad, and were now nearly useless, this burned as well as ever, and as well as any lamp need to burn. A minute's thought given to the difference between the students' lamp and others, gave us the clue to the trouble. Asking for a glass jar, an empty fruit jar was brought, and all the oil from one of the delinqueat lamps, with a previous shaking, was turned into it. The appearance of the oil in the jar was such as to call forth an exclamation of surprise, and well it might, for it looked like muddy water. Here was the cause of all the trouble, an accumulation of dust and other impurities. The lamps had been filled month after month without emptying; the wicks took up the clear oil, leaving the particles of dust behind; the lamps being daily filled, this dirt gradually accumulated until at last it was present in such quanti-ties as to clog up the wick and so destroy their porosity that they could not take up enough oil to give a proper light. Clean oil and new wicks being supplied, the lamps gave as good a light as ever. "But how did the students' lamp help you to guess what was the matter?" we were asked. Because we saw that the wick was not in the main body of the oil, but was fed by a tube which we noticed started from the oil reservoir at some distance above the bottom, so that the impurities could settle, and not reach to the wick. On emptying of the outer reservoir of this tamp, the oil was found to be as bad as in the others, but the particles of dust did not get to the wick. The quantity of dirt in the oil induced us to go a step farther and inquire where the main supply of oil was kept; we found that the can was in an open shed, and not far from where the coal ashes were sified; the funnel used to fill the feeding can was kept close by. Here we had the whole story, the funnel daily wet with oil, was where it could catch whatever dust might be floating in the air, with an extra supply when the coal was sifted. When the feeder was filled, the dust from the funnel was washed into it; and from thence it went into the lamps, where it accumulated with the results we have stated. Of course this, the main source of the trouble, was easily

For these reasons it has seemed to us that the recurrence of his birthday is no inappropriate moment for complimenting our American visitor upon the marveis of pedestrianism with which be has just familfarized us, and for expressing a hope that he will inspire more than one Englishman with the desire of emulating his enduring W. H. Ladd, a Quaker, residing in Brooklyn, sends the following to the editor of the New York Tribune: In the journal of Stephen Glellet, a noted and most worthy minister of the Society of Friends I find the following record, made in the fall of 1809: "I may not omit recording here the death of Tuomas Paine. A few days previous to my leaving home on my last religious visit, on hearing he was ill and in a very destitute condition, I went to see him, and found him in a wretched state; for he had been so neglected and foraken by his pretended friends that the common attentions to a sick man had been withheld from him. The skin of his body was, in some places, worn off, which greatly in-creased his sufferings. A purse was provided for him, and some needful comforts were supplied. He was mostly in a state of stupor, but something that had passed between us had made such an impression upon him that some time after my departure he sent for me. and on being told I was gone from home, he sent for another Friend. This induced a valuable young Friend (Mary Rascoe), who had resided in my family and continued at Greenwich during a part of my absence, frequently to go and take him some little refreshment suitable for an invalid. Once when she was there, three of his deistical associates came to the door, and in a loud, unfeeling manner, said: "Tom Paine, it is said you are turning christian, but we hope you will die as you have lived;" and then went away. On which, turning to Mary Rascoe he said, "You see what miserable comforters they are:" Once he asked her if she had ever read any of his writings, and on being told she had read but very little of them, he inquired what she thought of them, adding. "From such a one as you I expect a correct answer." She told him that when young his "Age of Reason," was put in her hands, but that the more she read it the more dark and distressed she felt, and she threw the book in the fire. "I wish all had done as you," he replied; "for if the devil had any agency in any work, he has had it in my writing that book." When going to carry him some reremedied by providing a proper place for the oil can and funnel. Boxss.—An instrument for extracting letters from toxes such as are used by merchants and others for the reception of letters has recently been devised by an ingenious boy. It consists of a piece of thick from wire about eighteen inches long, bent upon itself at one end so as to afford a convenient handle, and at the other end at a right angle to form a hook. The hooked end is introduced into the box and the letters are easily drawn up and abstracted.—[N. Y. Sun.
